

Solution For Current Economic Crisis and Inflation

by Mads Palsvig, oct 2022

The current economic system is organized in a way that is very beneficial to large corporations and blue collar workers in those corporations. Another group that benefits highly from the current economic system are high ranking people employed in the central administration of the public sector and large non-governmental organizations controlled. These non-governmental organizations are partly financed by some of the wealthiest individuals in the world.

The economy is organized such, that human beings and small local businesses are carrying pretty much the entire tax burden. The largest corporations in the world and the tax-exempt non-governmental organizations and foundations pay next to nothing. They have even often negotiated tax deals that include free rent, a highly subsidized energy bill, very low fixed annual amount of income tax for its local management team and several other benefits. The effective tax rates are thus even negative in some cases.

How did this happen?

How did they get such a good deal?

Why are there so few people complaining about this? How do the above groups get away with getting this enormous advantage to the detriment of most ordinary human beings?

One of the tools they use is through owning the mainstream media. Only a handful of corporations control at least 90% of the mainstream media. We have seen during the pandemic the servants of the public sector all too willingly taking care of censoring and limiting freedom of speech. Even in several countries jailing people who disagreed with the official narrative. Through these mainstream media channels they have successfully been promoting the following meme for the last 50 years. Whenever someone tries to discuss the topic of whether it is fair that these gigantic corporate structures do not contribute to the countries the benefit from operating in in the form of paying tax:

Meme: "Yes, but they create a lot of jobs".

Well. So did the Soviet Union.

There was no unemployment in the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union kept its citizens occupied the entire week for very long hours with mostly unproductive work in the immense public sector and if it was in the industrial or service sector then in corporations that produced goods in monopoly like conditions of a very poor quality, both goods and services were below par. Businesses that made money transferred the entire profit to the central administration in Moscow, and poorly managed businesses with deficits received investments from the central administration. Effectively a 100% tax transferred to the technocrats who shared the revenue with the worst performing businesses.

Anyone who has read Professor Anthony Sutton's book "Wall Street and the Bolshevik Revolution" will see the similarities to the present time and know that the same group of people who share the ideologies of bolshevism are behind the current prevailing economic system that tries to monopolize the economy and make it as inefficient as possible. As it was in the Soviet Union.

In the financial crisis in 2008, somehow the largest banks in the world managed to grow by hundreds of billions of dollars while several countries went into the deepest economic crisis since World War II. This is by design as is described in the book "The Globalization of Poverty" by Michel Chossudovsky. The IMF, World Bank and other international supranational powers have been behind the de facto theft of the assets in more than 150 countries in the world using the same recipe every single time. Always using the same strategy:

1. Arrive in the country with financial difficulties.
2. Offer them a loan on certain conditions.
3. Require they make huge cutbacks in the public sector and call back bank loans, thus minimizing the monetary base of the country.
4. When people then lose their job in the public sector, the tax base in the country goes down, as does the demand for goods and services in the private sector from the fired public sector workers.
5. The private sector then starts downsizing, firing employees and selling assets.
6. This results in the economy going tailspin into a recession.
7. Now with the country in a recession the tax revenues goes down and the country is unable to service the debt. It is not even able to pay the interest on the debt. The IMF then shows up with the solution:
8. The country can pay the interest to IMF in the form of real assets, such as their natural resources, real estate and government owned businesses.

It is by design. If this happened once then okay, people make mistakes. However if this happens in more than 150 countries and the same group of multinational corporations and private individuals profit from it every time, then it is a crime syndicate in operation.

So not only have we allowed the largest corporations to operate without contributing to the societies they operate in, but they also get away with de facto highway robbery in country after country.

Centralizing the economy and the administration of each country, and grouping more and more countries in few international organizations like UN, IMF, BIS, World Bank, WEF and the EU while looting, sorry "centralizing", all private wealth either in the form of theft, fraud or taxation is in fact Bolshevism 2.0.

The wealth of the country was also centralized in the Soviet Union, and the decisions were taken centrally with no regard to the real will of the people or the interest of the people. The leaders of the Soviet Union literally went from house to house and looted with force all the private wealth of the citizens. Now the same group of people, the same organizations, people sharing the same view of the world as in the bolshevism in 1917 are trying to create their dystopian world. They call it "The Great Reset", where they admit: "You will own nothing", they then claim to know that: "You will be happy". The first is for sure, the second maybe not so much.

For me what the pandemic really was about on top of injecting people with poison (for "the climate" of course and because depopulation allegedly is a "good thing") is to limit people's freedom, centralize all power in international organizations controlled by the people that has benefited by the looting of the 150 countries described above.
